Abstract
The presence of Christians in Central Asia in the late antique and medieval periods represents a forgotten episode in the history of Christianity. It is perhaps surprising to find Christians of the Byzantine-rite contributing to this history given their remoteness from the patriarchates of the Eastern Mediterranean. The patriarch of Antioch in particular seems to have appointed bishops to Central Asia, although it is not always clear where their sees were located and when they became merely titular appointments. These minority Chalcedonian communities are mentioned in a variety of Greek and Arabic sources and survived in this distant region in spite of changes in the ethnic and religious hegemony. Recent archaeological discoveries have endorsed the textual references to their settlement, but many questions relating to their identity still remain unanswered.

Introduction
From the fifth century onwards the Christian communities in the Eastern Mediterranean began to disintegrate into sectarian churches, each claiming to be representative of the true apostolic and ‘orthodox’ tradition. After the Council of Chalcedon in 451 the main separation was between the Chalcedonians and the anti-Chalcedonians with each faction employing various sobriquets against the other. The settlement and subsequent history of Byzantine-rite communities outside Byzantine territory, first under the Sasanians and then under the Arabs, offers an interesting study in demographic relocation. They represent a minority Byzantine presence in a non-Christian and non-Greek-speaking environment remote from the ecclesiastical centres of the Eastern Mediterranean. This paper will examine the evidence for so-called ‘Melkite’ or Byzantine-rite Christians in Central Asia in the late antique and medieval periods (Dauviller 1953, 1983; Nasrallah 1975; Fiey 1977). Before turning to this evidence, however, we need to discuss some of the titles and definitions relating to the divisions within the Eastern Christian communities.

Definitions

The question of nomenclature in relation to the history of the Christian communities in the Middle East and Central Asia is a complicated one (Griffith 2008). For example, after the condemnation of Nestorius (died c.451) at the Council of Ephesus in 431 those who were said to be his followers were known soon after as ‘Nestorians’ (Millar 2006: 159). The title was then subsequently foisted upon the Syriac-speaking Church of the East which had declared its independence in Sasanian Persia before 431 (Baum & Winkler 2003: 19–21). In other words, the condemnation of Nestorius at Ephesus was not the catalyst for establishing a ‘Nestorian’ Church. Nestorius himself never founded a church of his own and would have been horrified by the suggestion that he had. The so-called ‘Nestorian’ Church was a political and theological construct that never existed outside the imagination of those involved in the Christological controversies of the fifth century. We have not only to separate Nestorius the person from ‘Nestorianism’ the theological formulation, but we have also to separate ‘Nestorianism’ from the Church of the East (Brock 1996: 23–35; Seleznyov 2010).

After the Council of Chalcedon in 451 the Christian communities were divided into those who supported the dogmatic formula of the Council and those who opposed it, with the term ‘Monophysite’ not being found for the anti-Chalcedonians before the late sixth century (Frend 1972). An early use of this term is attested in the letters of Pope Gregory the Great (540–604), known to the Byzantines as Gregory the Dialogist (Gregory the Great, Migne, Patrologia Latina 70, Book XII, Epistle XVI: Ad Eulogium Alexandrinum Patriarcham; Book XI, Epistle LXII: Ad Quiricus). As Gregory spent six years in Constantinople and was engaged in the theological debates of his time, he presumably picked up this label during his stay in the Queen of Cities. It was of course a term of opprobrium, so it tells us more about what those targeted by it were supposed to believe, rather than what they actually believed (Winkler 1997). A particular group of ‘Monophysites’ was known as the Acephaloi or ‘headless ones’, rather than being called after the name of a heresiarch, as in the case of Arius and Nestorius.

The term Copt for Egyptian Christians was not used before the Arab invasions in the mid-seventh century. Before this the anti-Chalcedonian Christians in Egypt were known as Theodosians, after the sixth-century patriarch of Alexandria, Theodosius (r. 535–37), who was deposed by the emperor Justinian (r. 527–565) for supporting Severus of Antioch in exile in Egypt (Theophanes, Chronographia, AM 6033, 6121; Mango & Scott 1997). The term Copt was the name given to the Egyptian people before the Arab invasions and was thereafter applied to the Christian population. It was then adopted specifically by the anti-Chalcedonian Christians of Egypt. Interestingly, the term Jacobite was used by Syriac and Arabic writers for the anti-Chalcedonians in Egypt, as witnessed by al-Bīrūnī (973–1048) in the late tenth century (Sachau, 1879: 282), and Bar Hebraeus (1226–86), the Maphrian of the Jacobite or Syrian Orthodox Church, in the thirteenth century (Budge 1932: 123). Here the term Jacobite derives from the name Jacob Baradaeus (c. 500–78), a sixth-century bishop of Edessa and leader of the anti-Chalcedonians who evangelised in Syria and Mesopotamia (Griffith 2008: 134–36). The term Jacobite was probably used first by Chalcedonians to describe the anti-Chalcedonians in Syria. However, it is of interest to find it being used by westerners for Egyptian Copts as witnessed by Jacques de Vitry in the thirteenth century in his Historia Orientalis of 1220 (quoted in Cannuyer 2001: 131).

The term Melkite also came into prominence after the seventh-century Arab invasions, and was applied to Byzantine-rite Christians of the Middle East. It was initially used as a pejorative by the anti-Chalcedonians for those who adhered to Chalcedon and who remained loyal to the Byzantine patriarchs of Alexandria, Antioch and Jerusalem. The title Melkite derives from the Syriac 'malkā', meaning 'king', so the Melkites were the royalists or imperialists (Dick 1994: 9–10). It is unclear exactly when the Melkites began to identify themselves by this name, but members of this church saw themselves as belonging to a transnational community with a presence scattered throughout the Middle East. To begin with they were mostly Greek-speakers from the urban districts, as opposed to the more rural Syriac-speaking anti-Chalcedonians, but they adopted Syriac and Sogdian as well as Arabic into their Byzantine-rite liturgies. Since 1729 the term has been used almost exclusively for the Arabic-speaking Greek Catholics of the Middle East (Griffith 2008: 139).

The presence of Greek, Syriac and Georgian speakers in Palestinian monasteries is attested by the founder’s typikon of the Mar Sabas Monastery near Jerusalem, dated to after 1100 but reflecting earlier material (Thomas & Constantinides-Hero 2000: 1311–18). The famous monk of Mar Sabas and father of the church, John of Damascus (c. 670–749) in the eighth century, wrote in Greek but he was probably bilingual in Greek and Syriac. After John of Damascus the Melkite literati began to write in Arabic, producing a corpus of Christian literature still hardly known outside the Arabic-speaking world (Thomas 2007). Among the first of these was a Sabaite monk who became bishop of Harrān in northern Syria, Theodore Abū Qurrah (c. 750–c. 825), whose writings defended the Melkite position against anti-Chalcedonians as well as against Muslims and Jews (Lamoreaux 2001).

Late Antiquity

Evidence for Christianity among the Huns dwelling north of the Caucasus between the Black Sea and the Caspian Sea comes from the sixth-century Chronicle of Pseudo-Zachariah Rhetor. The author informs us that two men, John of Resh’aina and Thomas the Tanner from Amida in northern Syria, were taken captive by the Sasanian King Kavadh I (r. 488–96 and r. 498–530) and sold to the Huns among whom they remained for thirty years, but who were subsequently released and returned to tell their story. Following on from this bishop Qardust of Arran in Caucasian Albania together with a number of priests travelled to the land of the Huns where they remained for seven years, baptizing and translating texts into the Hunnic language (Greatrex 2011: 452–54; Thompson 1946; Mingana 1925: 303-4). These events took place in the first half of the sixth century and relate to the presence and missionary work of anti-Chalcedonian Christians among the Huns.

Again we hear of Christians among the Hephthalite Huns in 549 when the Catholicos of the Church of the East at Seleucia-Ctesiphon, Aba I (r. 540–52), dispatched a bishop to the region of the Oxus River in Bactria. This was in response to a request by the Huns to ordain as bishop a priest who had been sent as an emissary to the Sasanian King Khusr I (r. 531–579) (Mingana 1925: 304-5). The Byzantine historian Theophylact Simocatta records in 591 that among captives taken by Khusr I, and sent to the Byzantine Emperor Maurice (r. 582–602), were Turks who had crosses tattooed on their foreheads. They are reported to have adopted this facial decoration at the suggestion of the Christians among them as a prophylactic to ward off the plague (Whitby & Whity 1986: 13-15).

Chalcedonian Christian communities began to be established in Persia as a result of the Sasanian conquests of Byzantine territory in the Eastern Mediterranean in the mid-sixth century. Khusr I captured Antioch in 540 and deported most of the Christian population to Persia, settling the deportees in a purpose-built town modelled on Antioch, south of the capital of Seleucia-Ctesiphon. This is discussed by Procopius in his Persian Wars. He writes (Procopius, The Wars, 2.9.14; 14.1-4):

Now Chosroes built a city in Assyria in a place one day’s journey distant from the city of Ctesiphon, and he named it the Antioch of Chosroes and settled there all the captives from Antioch, constructing for them a bath and a hippodrome and providing that they should have free enjoyment of their other luxuries besides. Indeed he brought with him charioteers and musicians both from Antioch and from the other Roman cities. Besides this, he always provisioned these citizens of Antioch at public expense more carefully than in the fashion of captives, and he required that they be called king’s subjects ...

Unlike Persian captives who were often sold into slavery by the Byzantines the Sasanians made use of Byzantine captives for purposes of colonisation (Rotman 2009: 33–35; Lieu 1986: 475–505; Morony 2004: 161–79). The town was known as Rūmaghān or ‘city of the Romans’ as well as Better Antioch. It seems to have had a resident Catholicos, and according to the Syrian Orthodox historian John of Ephesus, a population of around 30,000 by the late sixth century (Brooks 1935–6: 239). A Sasanian seal in the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris with an inscription in Pahlavi is said by Phillpe Gignoux (1978) to read ‘Great Catholicos [of the] region of Hulvān and Balāsagān’, and this has been interpreted by Jean-Maurice Fiey (1995) to refer to the existence of a Melkite Catholicos of Central Asia by the seventh century. However, Hulvān and Balāsagān were western provinces and Richard Frye is of the opinion that the meaning of the inscription cannot be deciphered (Frye 1977: 31, pl. 1.3).
Among the deportees from Antioch at this time a large proportion would have been Chalcedonians (Greatrex 2003). However, during the Sasanian occupation of Byzantine territory in the Eastern Mediterranean under Khusro II (r. 591–628) from 614 to 628, the anti-Chalcedonian population was in the ascendency. In fact the Sasanians showed tolerance towards the anti-Chalcedonians who in turn saw the Sasanians more as liberators than oppressors, while the Chalcedonians were seen by the Sasanians as Byzantine collaborators. We should bear in mind that the Christian wife of Khusro II, Shirin, belonged to the Church of the East at one time and to the Syrian Orthodox Church at another (Baum 2005). According to the Syrian Orthodox historian, Dionysius of Tell-Mahrê, writing in the ninth century, the Sasanians expelled the Chalcedonian bishops from Mesopotamia and Syria. He writes (Palmer 1993: 125–26):

When Chosroes conquered Mesopotamia and expelled the Romans from it, he ordered at the same time the Chalcedonian bishops to be expelled from their churches and those churches to be given to the Jacobites, for they had possessed them since the time of Maurice, but for the last ten years they had been ousted from them as a result of the persecution by Domitian of Melitene. So the (liturgical) commemoration of the Synod of Chalcedon was utterly abolished east of the Euphrates. Chosroes sent for bishops from the east and installed them in the cities.

Not surprisingly there seems to have been an exchange of sectarian loyalties during the Sasanian occupation of former Byzantine territory. The profile of the Church of the East in the Eastern Mediterranean also increased as a result of the occupation despite being without a Catholicos for twenty years because of political infighting (Wilmshurst 2011: 64–5). This is confirmed by the Byzantine chronicler Theophanes who tells us that when the Byzantine Emperor Heraclius (r. 610–41) retook the city of Edessa he restored to the Chalcedonians the cathedral the Nestorians had held since Khusro’s time (Theophanes, Chronicle, AM 6120). Heraclius’ reconquest of Sasanian occupied territory brought him into contact with Persian Christian families who had migrated there (Kaegi 2003: 181). These Christians were in a double bind, however, because having taken up residency under the Sasanians they now found themselves stranded under the Byzantines.

After the capture of Seleucia-Ctesiphon by the Arabs in 637 the town of Better Antioch founded by Khosro I was known in Arabic as ‘al-Rūmiyya’. meaning ‘city of the Romans or Greeks’ (Kaldellis 2007; Parry 2009).

The town was abandoned in the mid-eighth century with the construction of the new Abbasid capital of Baghdad and the district razed during the civil war that saw al-Ma’mūn (r. 813–33) become caliph (Lunde & Stone 1989: 156). In fact in 762 the Arab caliph al-Manṣūr (r. 754–75) transferred the entire community to the province of Chach in Transoxania together with their Catholicos, who was addressed thereafter as the ‘Catholicos of Romagyris’, but who by the end of the tenth century had changed his title to ‘Catholicos of Khorasan’. The Greek title ‘Romagyris’ (Ῥωμογύρεως) may derive from the Middle Persian ‘Roumagird’ meaning ‘town or colony of Romans’ (Klein 1999).

In medieval Baghdad there was a Christian quarter, known in Arabic as dār-ar-Rūm, ‘the house of the Romans’, where Melkite, Church of the East, and Syrian Orthodox communities resided.

The Arab conquest of Central Asia was secured when the Arabs defeated a Chinese army at the Battle of Talas in 751. The relocation of Christians by al-Manṣūr to the province of Chach in 762 would have placed them at the furthest reaches of the Abbasid caliphate. The province of Chach was situated on the eastern bank of the Syr Darya (Jaxartes) and is listed in the inscription of Shapur I (r. 242–72) at Naqsh-i Rustam (Bosworth 1990). The city known today as Tashkent, meaning ‘city of stone’, retains a dissimilated form of the name Chach. Recent excavations at Qarshovul-tepe south west of Tashkent have unearthed evidence of a possible Christian settlement (Savchenko & Sheyko 2010). However, an alternative suggestion is that the Catholicos of Romagyris was located at Nishapur in Khorasan, the title deriving from the Christian quarter of that city. The title is mentioned by the patriarch of Antioch, Peter III (r. 1028–51), in his correspondence along with that of Irenopolis (Εἰρηνούπολεως), the see of a second catholicos (Charon 2000: 265–66). This title is a Greek translation from the Arabic meaning ‘city of peace’, which was an epithet given to the city of Baghdad.

In the Arabic Vita of the Melkite patriarch of Antioch, Christophoros (r. 960–67), written by the protospatharios Ibrahim ibn Yuhanna, an account is given of the transportation by al-Manṣūr of the Christian community to Chach (Zayat 1952: 11-38, 333–66):

When the Muslims constructed the ‘City of Peace’ (Madinat as-Salām), that is Baghdad, they decided to move the Christian community. They were transported to a far off land in Persia called Chach and their Catholicos was exiled with them.
These émigrés were known as the ‘colony of Romans’ which was a suitable name for them.

Later with the settlement of more Melkites in Baghdad a dispute arose between the two communities over who was entitled to claim the Catholicos. Those in Chach argued they had more right to him because he had gone with them to Central Asia, whereas those in Baghdad claimed him because formerly he resided at Seleucia-Ctesiphon which was in their district (Zayat 1952: 23–25). It seems it was as a result of this dispute that the Melkites eventually ended up with two Catholicoi. However, the Catholicos of the Church of the East, Abraham III (r. 905–936), objected to the Melkites using the title of Catholicos because of their alleged disloyalty to the caliphate. The consecration of the Melkite Catholicos for Baghdad was disrupted by members of the Church of the East which led the Abbásid authorities to impose a fine on the Melkite metropolitan, obliging him to sign in 912 a pledge preventing the Melkite community from having a Catholicos in Baghdad (Fiey 1995: 387–89; Wilmshurst 2011: 193).

The Middle Ages

In the twelfth century an archimandrite and deacon of Hagia Sophia in Constantinople, Nilos Doxapatrios, tells us that the patriarch of Antioch (Parthey 1967: 271):

... had under his jurisdiction all of Asia and the East, including India, and even now he dispatches, after arranging it, a Catholicos with the title of Romagyris; in Persia also, which comprises Babylonia, now called Baghdad, the patriarch sends a Catholicos with the title of Catholicos of Irenoupolis.

The inclusion of India by Doxapatrios does not appear to be accurate because there is no evidence as far as we are aware of Melkites in India in this period. However, the mention of a Catholicos of Romagyris and a Catholicos of Irenopolis in the twelfth century is important confirmation of the situation. Yet there appears to be a gap in the record from this period through to 1364 when the title Romagyris became attached to that of the Catholicos of Georgia, indicating that it was a Melkite catholicate, as the Georgians were Byzantine Orthodox, but it is not clear whether by this time it was merely a titular appointment (Richard 2004: 578).
The presence of Melkites in the region of Tashkent in Central Asia is attested then from the eighth century, and according to the Muslim scholar, al-Bīrūnī, writing at the end of the tenth century, there appears to have been a Melkite metropolitan at Merv (Sachau 1879: 289). There is little evidence for Melkites further east, however, in spite of a bilingual Psalm fragment in Greek and Sogdian (see below) found in the ruins of a monastery at Bulayiq near Turfan in Chinese Central Asia (Xinjiang) (Sheldon 2008). The only evidence for Byzantine-rite Christians in China is the mention of a contingent of Alan guards at the Mongol court (Moule 1930: 260–64), but this does not exclude the possibility of there being others owing allegiance to this church whose presence is thus far unknown.

In 1253 the Franciscan William of Rubruck met Alans in Central Asia, whom he described as: ‘Christians of the Greek rite who use the Greek alphabet and have Greek priests, and yet are not schismatic like the Greeks but honour every Christian without respect of persons’ (Jackson 1990: 102). The king of the Alans in the Caucasus is said to have become Byzantine Orthodox in the early tenth century, but relations with Constantinople appear to have soured soon after (Alemany 2000: 187, 239). There is also evidence for Byzantine Orthodox Christians among the Cuman (Qipchāq) and Tatars at Sudaq in the Crimea in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries (Vásáry 1988; Golden 1998).

During the pax Mongolica when Tabriz was the capital of the Il-khanate in Persia it was visited by many western travellers, who report the presence of Armenians, Greeks, and Syrians. The Byzantine wife of Il-khan Abaqa (r. 1265–82) in the late thirteenth century, Maria Despina Khatun, the illegitimate daughter of Emperor Michael VIII Palaiologos (r. 1259–82), is known to have sent for iconographers from Constantinople to decorate a Greek church in Tabriz, and one of the painters was asked to decorate a church built by the Maphrian of the Syrian Orthodox Church, Bar Hebraeus (Budge 1932: xxvii). Maria was a patroness of the convent of the Theotokos in the Phanar district of Constantinople which was subsequently known as St Mary of the Mongols. Even after the devastations wrought by Tamerlane (1336–1405) in the second half of the fourteenth century, we still hear of Syrian Orthodox, Armenian and Melkite Christian communities in Samarkand (Markham 1859: 171). Thus we can trace the presence of Melkite communities in Central Asia through to the beginning of the fifteenth century.
Manuscript discoveries

Interestingly no Christian Sogdian texts have been found in Sogdiana itself. Some of those found at Bulayiq near Turfan in Xinjiang may have come from Sogdiana, while others may have been translated or copied at Turfan. The presence of Christians so far east was a result of the Silk Road trade, with Sogdian being the lingua franca of the merchants and the Sogdians the dominant traders (Vaissière 2005). The Armenian Het um wrote in 1307 that there were Christians called Sogdians (Soldains) in Chorasmia (area south of the Aral Sea) who had their own language, celebrated the liturgy like the Greeks, and owed obedience to the Patriarch of Antioch (Dauvillier 1953: 67–68). This is confirmed by al-Bīrūnī a native of Chorasmia, who lists the feasts of the Melkite calendar as well as those of the Church of the East, and who says he would have included the Syrian Orthodox as well had he known Christians of this community (Sachau 1879: 312). The existence of these Melkites may be evidence that Sogdian had earlier been used liturgically by them in Sogdiana (Sims-Williams 1992). This suggestion gains support from the ninth-century Life of Constantine the Philosopher, where Sogdian is included in a list of Christian languages. The Constantine of this Life is better known by his monastic name Cyril, who along with his brother Methodius, is credited with developing the first Slavonic alphabet and evangelising in Moravia (Kantor 1983: 71).

The most important Christian documents discovered so far in Central Asia come from Xinjiang, with the evidence for Christianity in the Central Asian Republics of the former Soviet Union being largely epigraphic and archaeological (Savchenko & Dickens 2009). The German Turfan expeditions between 1904 and 1907 brought back manuscript fragments in Sogdian from the ruined monastery at Bulayiq near Turfan mentioned above. The vast majority of the fragments belong to the Church of the East, many included in the Christian Sogdian Manuscript C2 (Sims-Williams 1985), consisting of homilies, commentaries, canons, martyrdoms, legends and monastic discourses. One fragment is from the Antirrheticus of Evagrius of Pontus (c. 345–99), another is from the Nicene Creed, and there are extracts from the Apophthegmata Patrum. Some fragments remain unidentified because the Syriac originals from which they were translated may no longer be extant. Other fragments include Syriac liturgical books with rubrics in Sogdian, psalters in Syriac, and texts in Uighur and Middle Persian. The appearance of Middle Persian loanwords in Sogdian is noticeable including the term tarsāk for Christian, that is, ‘one who fears (God)’ (Pines 1968).

Of particular interest are two Sogdian fragments containing parts of Psalm 32 in the numbering of the LXX with the opening words of the psalm of one fragment written in Greek. It is dated to the eighth or ninth century and Nicholas Sims-Williams has suggested that it may indicate a Melkite presence in the Turfan oasis, either that or it is a product of the Melkite community in Sogdiana, perhaps from Chach (Sims-Williams 2004: 623–31; 2011: 461–66). There are also fragments of a draft letter in Syriac from Bulayiq that appear to be addressed to a Byzantine dignitary. The letter has been dated to the tenth century and follows the stylistic conventions of Byzantine epistolography of the period (Maróth 1985; Sundermann 1994). It is noticeable that the Persian title ‘king of kings’ is used in the Syriac as an equivalent of the Byzantine imperial title ‘autocrator’. The reign of the Emperor Heraclius and his recovery of Byzantine territory from Khosro II in 628 is usually associated with the change of title from ‘autocrator’ to ‘basileus’ in Byzantium (Zuckerman 2010).

Al-Bīrūnī

We have had occasion to mention the Muslim polymath al-Bīrūnī because he is an important witness to the presence of Melkites in Central Asia in the tenth and eleventh centuries. He is considered the father of Religionswissenschaft or comparative religion, because in his Chronology of Ancient Nations he discusses Manichaeanism, Zoroastrianism, and Christianity as well as Islam (Kamaruzaman 2003). His approach to the study of the Christian sects is more anthropological and less polemical than that of his contemporary ʿAbd al-Jabbār in his Critique of Christian Origins (Reynolds & Samir 2010). When al-Bīrūnī comes to Christianity he has first-hand knowledge of the Melkite and Church of the East communities, but not of the Syrian Orthodox because as he says: ‘We have not succeeded in finding anyone who belonged to their sect or knew their principles’. His Chronology is the work of a young scholar of 27 who later went to India where he studied Sanskrit and wrote his famous description of India (Sachua 1910).

In his discussion of the calendar and feasts of the Melkite Christians, in which the months are listed under their Syriac names, he provides unique information about the community in his homeland of Khorasan. As the whole section on the Melkite calendar is worthy of a study in itself we can only pick out a few things here. For example, he mentions the fact that the Melkites know only of six ecumenical councils (Sachau 1879: 291), a situation which is confirmed by other sources (Griffith 1993). The seventh ecumenical council of 787 was not ratified as ecumenical until the time of Photios (r. 858–67 & r. 877–86), the patriarch of Constantinople in the ninth century. He confirms its ecumenicity in his Encyclical Letter to the Bishops of the East of 866 in which he writes: ‘A report has come to us that some churches under your apostolic throne number ecumenical councils up to the sixth but do not know the seventh’ (Pelikan & Hotchkiss 2003: 307). There had been a controversy over the status of the seventh council (Parry 1996: 133–34), but under Photios the issue was resolved in favour of its ecumenicity and this needed to be conveyed to the patriarchs of Antioch, Alexandria and Jerusalem. Clearly for the Melkites of Central Asia under Islam this information was still not known to them at the time of al-Bīrūnī, indicating their isolation from their Byzantine co-religionists.

The Melkite calendar of al-Bīrūnī begins with the Syriac month Tishrîn I, which is October, not September as in the Byzantine calendar. It seems that the Melkites along with the Syriac-speaking Christian communities began their liturgical year in October, clearly on the basis of their use of the Seleucid Era which began on 1 October 312 BCE. Al-Bīrūnī’s calendar includes a Feast of Roses which is not attested elsewhere, and a discussion about baptism which seems not to be a triple or full immersion (Sachau 1879: 288–89). In relation to the Feast of Roses he lists it twice in the Melkite calendar, first he records it as May 3 and then as May 15 (Sachau 1879: 292, 295).

For May 3 he says: ‘The Feast of Roses according to the ancient rite, as it is celebrated in Khwarizm. On this day they bring Juri-roses to the churches, the reason of which is this, that Mary presented on this day the first roses to Elizabeth, the mother of John [the Baptist].’ And for the May 15 he says: ‘Feast of Roses according to the new rite, (postponed to this date) because on the 4th [3rd?] the roses are still very scarce. On the same date it is celebrated in Khurasan, not on the original date’. The two dates for the festival, for the old and new rite, take place in Khwarizm and Khorasan respectively. The Melkite Feast of Roses may be connected with the ancient Roman Rhodophoria and/or Rosalia festivals both of which took place during May and which were associated with the Isis cult. An epithet of Isis applied to the Mother of God in the Byzantine Church was ‘the unfading rose’ (Witt 1997: 273).
Conclusion

The rediscovery of early Christianity in Central Asia started at the beginning of the twentieth century with the Silk Road expeditions of European explorers such as Aurel Stein, Albert von Le Coq, and Paul Pelliot (Foltz 1999). Most of the evidence discovered relates to the Church of the East and its settlements in the region as well as those further East in China during the Tang (618–907) and Yuan dynasties (1272–1368) (Malek 2006). Although the evidence for Melkite Christians in Central Asia is not as extensive as that for the Church of the East it needs to be included in the picture. We have looked at some of that evidence and seen that it represents communities established through deportation and colonization residing in remote areas cut off from their patrimony in the Eastern Mediterranean. Future archaeological discoveries may provide additional evidence for Melkites in Central Asia, but until then questions pertaining to their ethnic and linguistic identity remain somewhat conjectural.

Acknowledgements

I need to thank Professor Nicholas Sims-Williams and Dr Mark Dickens for their suggestions for improving this paper. It goes without saying that I am responsible for any errors that remain.

References

Moule, A.C. (1930), Christians in China Before the Year 1550, London: SPCK.

History & Theology

Notes

1 Frend (1972) states that the term ‘is only apt as a description of the anti-Chalcedonians after the establishment of a separate Monophysite hierarchy in the second half of Justinian’s reign’.

2 Note that Mingana (1925) conflates discussion about the Huns in the sources he cites.

3 On the location of the town, see Fiey, J.-M. (1967), ‘Topography of Al-Mada’in (Seleucia-Ctesiphon Area)’, Sumer 23, pp. 3-38.

4 Also discussed by Klein (1999: 248-9).

5 Those whom we identify today as Byzantines called themselves ‘Romans’ hence the term ‘Rum’ used by the Arabs. The term ‘Hellene’ was not used by the Byzantines until much later., see Kaldellis, A. (2007), Hellenism in Byzantium: The Transformation of Greek Identity and the Reception of the Classical Tradition. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press; Parry, K. (2009), ‘What to Jettison Before you Go Sailing (to Byzantium)’, Phronema 24, pp. 19-33.

8 For the ancient geographical location of these two areas see Abazov, Palgrave Concise Historical Atlas of Central Asia.
Thinking Diversely:
Hellenism and the Challenge of Globalisation

Guest Editor Elizabeth Kefallinos
The Modern Greek Studies Association of Australia and New Zealand (MGSAANZ)

President - Anthony Dracopoulos
Vice President - Elizabeth Kefallinos
Treasurer - Panayota Nazou
Secretary - Panayiotis Diamadis

The Modern Greek Studies Association of Australia and New Zealand (MGSAANZ) was founded in 1990 as a professional association by those in Australia and New Zealand engaged in Modern Greek Studies. Membership is open to all interested in any area of Greek studies (history, literature, culture, tradition, economy, gender studies, sexualities, linguistics, cinema, Diaspora etc.).

The Association issues a Newsletter (Εθνικός Αοί), holds conferences and publishes two journals annually.

Editorial board
Vrasidas Karalis (University of Sydney)
Maria Herodotou (La Trobe University)
Panayota Nazou (University of Sydney)
Dr. Anthony Dracopoulos (The University of Sydney)
Panayiotis Diamadis (University of Technology)
Elizabeth Kefallinos (Macquarie University)

Membership and subscriptions (including annual subscription for 2 issues)
Individual: AUS $40
             US $35
Institutions: AUS $70
              US $70
              EUR €50
Full-time students/ pensioners
AUS $20
US $30
EUR €30

Correspondence and payments
Department of Modern Greek, University of Sydney, NSW 2006 Australia
T (+612) 9351 7252 F (+612) 9351 3543
E-mail vrasidas.karalis@sydney.edu.au

Please send submissions in Times New Roman 12pt, 1.5 spacing, single inverted commas for quotes, with endnotes rather than footnotes.

The periodical welcomes papers in both English and Greek on all aspects of Modern Greek Studies (broadly defined). Prospective contributors should preferably submit their papers on disk and hard copy. All published contributions by academics are refereed (standard process of blind peer assessment). This is a EUST recognised publication.

The periodical welcomes papers in both English and Greek on all aspects of Modern Greek Studies (broadly defined). Prospective contributors should preferably submit their papers on disk and hard copy. All published contributions by academics are refereed (standard process of blind peer assessment). This is a EUST recognised publication.

Cover Image
source: wikipedia website
artist: Panayiotis Zografos

Design
Marietta and Martin Slukerna
Two Minds

Typography
Museo Sans, Chaparral Pro and Scotch Modern Contents

PART 1
Introduction
Aspects of Greek Culture / p.11
Special papers for Athens 2004 / p.14
Elizabeth Kefallinos
The Night Boat to Ancona / p.18
Martha Mylona

PART 2
History and Theology
Hellenistic globalisation and the metanarrative of the logos / p.23
Mario Baghos
Tipping points: Greek culture in the years of internationalisation / p.39
Vicky Karaiskou

What has Athens to do with Jerusalem?
Greek Orthodoxy and the continuity of Hellenism / p.53
Dimitri Kepreotes
Racing ahead to a globalized world: the Ptolemaic commonwealth and Posidippus' Hippika / p.71
Paul McKechnie
The Hellenism of Ammianus Marcellinus / p.81
Alanna Nobbs

Byzantine-Rite Christians (Melkites) in Central Asia in Late Antiquity and the Middle Ages / p.91
Ken Parry
Ancient coins for the colonies: Hellenism and the history of numismatic collections in Australia / p.109
Kenneth Sheedy
Greek-Cypriot settlement in South Australia during the 1950s / p.123
Maria Shialis
An investigation into how Greek Cypriots throughout the Hellenic diaspora have been affected by the missing persons of Cyprus from the 1974 Turkish invasion / p.133
Andrea Stylianou

PART 3
Culture & Identity
Darwinism and its impact in the recent Greek press / p.155
Maria Zarimis
Multiple intergenerational identities: Greek-Australian women across generations / p.173
Elizabeth Kefallinos
Towards a multi-layered construct of identity by the Greek diaspora: an examination of the films of Nia Vardalos, including My Big Fat Greek Wedding and My Life in Ruins / p.193
Mersina Tonys-Soulos
Switching channels between the old and new mentalities: exploring inter-generational changing expectations faced by Greek Orthodox clergy in their ministry in the Australian context / p.207
Catherine Tsacalos
We are different and the same: exploring Hellenic culture and identity in Aotearoa-New Zealand / p.223
Athena Helena Maria Gavriel
Cosmopolitan orientation & creative resistance in contemporary Athenian culture / p.241
Kyriaki Frantzi
Sarantaris and Prometheus, the Idiot and the Thief / p.261
Katherine Cassis
'Get yer ya yas out': aspects of Perth's Greek Australian youth culture from the 1950s to the 1970s / p.281
John N Yiannakis
The Greek diaspora in a globalised world / p.293
George Kanarakis

PART 4
Education
Teaching the legacy of Hellenism in an Australian university – an interdisciplinary adventure / p.319
Blanche Menadler
Greek language in the age of globalisation
A translator's perspective / p.341
Sophia Sakellis

PART 5
Global Athens
The impact of Athens on the development of the Greek language and the ancient Greek letters / p.355
George Kanarakis
The Hymn of Athens by Kostis Palamas: A Poem about Athens or Athens as a Poem? / p.363
Elizabeth Kefallinos
Images of a Greek Goddess in Anime: Athena and Nausicaa in Nausicaa of the Valley of the Wind / p.377
Mio Bryce

Contributors / p.394
Introduction*

Aspects of Greek Culture

Over thousands of years Greek culture has spread across the globe to many people – through language, medicine and the sciences, philosophy, art, archaeology, architecture and politics; much of has been bestowed upon the world by Greek civilization. Greek culture has survived from the 3rd millennium BC when the original Hellenes first arrived in the area now known as Greece. Despite many wars, foreign occupations and other threats to its culture, Hellenism has persisted. Today however, we question its future. What do we mean today by the concept of Hellenism? How will Hellenism survive in a globalised world? The trends of speedy explorations, technology and the sciences as well as the minimisation of the concept of time and place, the unprecedented mobilisation of the populations and the rapid diversification of what were once perceived as exclusive national cultures have transformed the Globe into a village. As such, these circumstances have created new avenues by which to understand the world. Globalisation is paradoxical insofar as it restricts the world and at the same time effectuates a global dynamism. New trends construct new identities, and the need of a re-evaluation and redefinition of the Shelf is now paramount to many academic disciplines. The articles included in this publication well – project this attitude, encapsulating the concept of Hellenism in light of the contemporary concerns that relate to global realities.
Whilst exploring past, historical themes, the section entitled History and Theology is not without contemporary relevance insofar as it envisions aspect of Hellenism as global phenomena. Thus Hellenistic Globalisation and the Metanarratives of the Logos, articulates the current contradictions with globalisation in contrast to that of Christian antiquity. The author’s argument reveals that despite its claim of cultural and political integration, contemporary globalisation has assisted in the loss of metanarratives such as the Logos; metanarratives which, he suggests should be revived. Tipping Points: Greek culture in the age of Internationalisation, explores the theme of Art and its politicisation during the 1970s and beyond, as Greece’s position symbolically changed upon the European map. The article, What has Athens to do with Jerusalem? discusses the historical and religious connection between Athens and Jerusalem. The author explores the very long relationship of Hellenism with Greek Orthodoxy, both philosophically and historically, giving particular emphasis to the transformation from the pre-Christian to Christian era. Racing ahead to globalising world: The Ptolemaic Commonwealth and Posidippus’ Hippika, relates the global Greek civilization of the post-Alexandrian world to the foundations of our contemporary globalised world. The author’s proposition that Hellenic kingdoms actively sought legitimacy and validation through maintenance and reinforcement of Greek institutions and values is well established through his focus on a selected text from the poet Posidippus’ Hippika. The author of The Hellenism of Ammianus Marcellinus focuses upon the personality of Marcellinus by giving particular emphasis to his love of Hellenism; although a noble Roman, Marcellinus wanted to be remembered as “former soldier of a Greek”, a statement that uncovers his admiration of Hellenism during the powerful, Roman era. Byzantine - Rite Christians (Melkites) in Central Asia in Late Antiquity and the Middle Ages, presents a comprehensive, historical overview of the presence of Byzantine-rite Christians, in Central Asia, an article which has often been neglected within early Christian studies. In the article, Ancient Coins for the Colonies: Hellenism and the History of Numismatic Collections in Australia, the author observes global Hellenism through a history of numismatic collections; he successfully develops a cultural connection between Greece and Australian (the imperial colony) and links it to the concept of Hellenism within the era of contemporary Globalisation. The Greek - Cypriot Settlement to South Australia during the 1950s, concentrates on the contemporary presence of Greek-Cypriots in South Australia, and as such provides a springboard for further investigation into their settlement in that particular state. Update on the missing persons of Cyprus from the 1974 Turkish invasion, is an original piece of work that investigates the geo-political and historical position of Cyprus in its globalised dimensions. The inherent ongoing political agendas interwoven within the humanitarian issue of “missing people” is the central theme and it is the basis of a much larger piece of research which investigates the shifting tides of international, political tensions and alliances during the last four decades. Darwinism and its Impact in the Recent Greek Press, discusses the concept of Darwinism as depicted in the process of journalism in the daily press.

The second section includes papers whose focus is on culture and identity, popular themes that pervade interdisciplinary studies as a means of exploring today’s multidimensional identities. A generation (To vêkê) presents a number of Greek-Australians, or those of Greek descent, reflecting upon their forebears, and/or their succeeding generations, as well as upon themselves revealing – through cross – comparison - insightful personal, socio-cultural and political layers across time.

The Greek Diaspora in a Globalised World, offers a thorough investigation of the term Diaspora, and in the process discusses the dynamics of Greek diaspora historically and geographically. Sarantaris and Prometheus, the Idiot and the Thief, nourishes and develops further understanding of the work and thought of one of Greece’s significant, but not very well-known, poets of the early 20th century Greece. Multiple, Intergenerational Identities: Greek-Australian Women across Generations, explore the multiplicity of identity in three generations of women in Australia; oral narratives reflect a self-defined process and development of identities that exist within a continuous flux of re-evaluation and redefinition; it also reflects the process of transformation from first generation migrant to third generation Australian-born women. The author of Cosmopolitan orientation & creative resistance in contemporary Athenian culture, focus on the free press magazine Lifo to reveal the dialectic between global and local culture in Athens; it also includes the then-emerging economic crisis in Greece and its effects upon the "cosmopolitan orientation and creative resistance" in Athens. We are different and the same: Exploring Hellenic culture and identity in Aotearoa- New Zealand, adds valuably to our understanding of the multidimensional qualities of cultural identities, from the local, to the global; the author explores the dynamic complexities that generate and regenerate cultural identity in both positive and negative light. Towards a multi-layered construction of identity by the Greek Diaspora: an examination of the films of Nia Vardalos, including “My Big Fat Greek wedding” (2002) and “My life in Ruins” (2009), presents an attempt to investigate the multiple-layered metamorphic flux of “identity” within the context of Nia Vardalos’ films. What this paper offers is of relevance and immediacy to current contemporary thinking on the transformative nature (empowerment/disempowerment) of identity. Switching Channels between the old and new mentalities: Exploring inter-generational changing expectations faced by Greek Orthodox their ministry in Australia, deals with a growing – and indeed, often overlooked – area of research into the Greek-Australian experience in the area of the Greek Orthodox Church; it exposes the inter-generational complexities encountered by Greek Orthodox priests and their wives in congregations containing both “old” and “new” outlooks (towards the Church, its priests and their perceived roles and responsibilities).

The last section entitled Education incorporates papers that deal with education in regard to the “legacy of Hellenism”. Hellenism is often relegated to Ancient History studies in both high school and tertiary education; a reductionist approach which envisages its legacy as part of distant – and for this reason – mystic past, and which is not easy to overcome. Teaching the legacy of Hellenism in an Australian University – an interdisciplinary adventure, exposes the process of teaching this “legacy of Hellenism” at the level of tertiary education, particularly within the International Studies Department at Macquarie University. Greek language in the age of Globalisation: The translator’s perspective, explores translations and their problematic as a mean of communication within the global context.

Special papers for Athens 2004
Athens became a global city during the Olympics of 2004 and beyond; significantly Athens became a global symbol when the Olympic torch passed through the streets of the most important Olympic cities, including Sydney.
The relay from Olympia to the stadium of Athens marks, for the “first time ever” the flame’s globetrotting around the world, in order to disseminate the message of unity, peace and ekecheiria (Olympic Truce). It is in this framework that some distinguished historians, philosophers and philologists, from Macquarie, Sydney and Charles Sturt Universities came together to celebrate the Olympic city of Athens for one day conference entitled Athens Day Conference- A day for all things Athenian (31st of July, 2004). The event also highlighted the 40th anniversary since the foundation of Macquarie University, and as such, explored the apollonian light of Olympism, spiritual armenia and noble competition as encapsulated within Greek Studies and at Macquarie University’s former emblem, light house – a symbol of knowledge, innovation and distinguished scholarship – (that is, another way to disseminate Hellenism in the era of harsh Globalisation). The one-day conference attracted ten distinguished scholars; a selection of the presented papers, included in this publication: Images of Greek Goddess in Anene: Athena and Nausicaa of the Valley of Wind, examines the formation of Miyazaki’s Nausicaa in visual, psychological and cross-cultural contexts whilst at the same time exposing the Japanese appreciation of Greek mythology in both artistic and literary creations. The Impact of Athens on the Development of the Greek Language and the Ancient Letters discusses the significance of Athens in antiquity as a centre of knowledge. The paper reveals the remarkable development that took place in Athens in every aspect of human thought; the author gives however emphasis to the role of the Greek language as a mean that transferred the knowledge of the great Greek minds to the rest of the world until today. Athena, diamond-jewelled, ring of the Earth: A Poem about Athens or Athens as a Poem? In the light of Athens as an Olympic city that attracted the interest of the globe in the 2004, the author of this paper explores the Greek literary universe in order to sightsee the way that poets create an artistic image of Athens; thus the question that is proposed and discussed in this paper is Palamas’ hymn for Athens: is the hymn of Athens one of the national poems created only to enhance the nationalist conscience of the Greek people, as many scholars believe, or did Palamas create, poetically, a personal image of Athens?

The papers presented in this volume are interactive, diverse, synchronic and diachronic. The contributors redefine Hellenism in the age of globalisation within various disciplines. It seems that Hellenism is no longer a monolithic aspect of scholarship but an ongoing process able to absorb the multiplicity of novel, cultural aspects. Greek studies has emerged from its traditional introversion into the dynamic arena of a globalized extroversions. It has expanded successfully into various other fields making it interdisciplinary in nature and diverse in notion. Interdisciplinary process gives to Greek studies a fresh breath which pushes it forward into new areas of scientific research, as well as teaching and learning. From the contributions of this volume the creative dialogue that Greek studies has initiated with the past, namely between antiquity and early Christianity with the present, has been made evident. Until recently antiquity exclusively belonged to a scholarship which did not permit – or have a place – for a dialogue with the present; which means that a creative dialogue with the past gives a new dimension to Greek studies. Greek studies is not longer a dead past but a living, creative force which enlightens the past and fertilizes the present. Also, a creative dialogue is evident with diverse social and cultural dynamics. Greek scholars in the Diaspora appreciate the scientifically productive dialogue between the past and contemporary scholarship which allows them in turn to engage in an innovative exchange of ideas, develop diversification, and conceptualize an enriched construction of a hybrid Greek-Australian identity that is unique and promising for posterity. Hellenism certainly is not limited to Greeks inherently lends itself to an expansion which encompasses individuals from all over the world. In its renowned Greekness it is not identified with the limited boarders of a place, namely Greece but is amplified, enhanced and fertilized by new elements, new routes, new minds unaffected from distractive constructions. Hellenism constantly re-invents whilst preserving its initial nature and it is this paradoxical stability and flexibility that has allowed it to survive throughout the centuries as a continuous, re-creative process. Hellenism is that notion which is maintained and promulgated by all those individuals – such as the contributors of this volume – who study, research, teach Greek, or even find a personal, existential meaning in its humane values. The various thematic contributions within this volume prove that Hellenism has a bright future in the Diaspora.

The articles in the present edition have been selected from peer reviewed papers that were originally presented at the 15th International Conference of Modern Greek Studies Association Austria and New Zealand, at Macquarie University, in December 2010.
The Night Boat to Ancona

The red grapes hang heavy above the Italian lovers’ balcony in Nicopolis*, their dew droplets glisten in the moonlight.
The heat has quenched itself, mellowing in the arms of the night.
The scent of the night jasmine fused with the passion and insomnia of the cicadas,
waking from an eight year slumber,
too long the wait,
the air a frenzy of mating calls.

Further up by the Gates at the Acheron river, Pluto, silent
but deadly,
keeps his cool, waiting...

The midnight boat to Ancona,
a chandelier all lit up,
sails by silently,
gliding on the Ionian sea,
vanishing into a starry darkness,
leaving behind a vacuum of night,
of emptiness.
A loss.

In the woods the tourists frolic merrily;
shrieks and the breaking of bottles
pierce the night,
punctuating the cicadas’ concert.
A night owl startled flies past crying out in a tone
one might wrongly interpret as despair.

Despair, is this what Antony felt here, in the hills of Actium, measuring himself against Octavian and Rome?
Do the hills remember the echoes of his lost battle?
Do the old olive trees still carry the cry in their rings?
Do the shells, the pebbles under my feet, hide deep inside, the memory of Cleopatra’s ships leaving him?
Do the waves bring it ashore,
whispering it,
again and again?
Do they?

And all along, down south in the African heat Alexandria –
implacable, an end waiting-
peering through its windows,
nonchalant,
languid,
for Antony’s return
and his farewell.

*Nicopolis - an ancient city, north of Actium, founded by the Roman emperor Augustus (Octavian), in 31 BC, to commemorate his victory, in the battle of Actium, over Mark Antony and Queen Cleopatra of Egypt. The ruins are near Preveza in Western Greece.
Contributors

Mr Mario Baghos
mario.baghos@students.mq.edu.au

Mario Baghos is a PhD candidate in Ancient History at Macquarie University. In 2009, he was awarded both the Rev Dr Brian Murray and Diane Feneley Memorial Prizes for his undergraduate degree in theology. In 2010, he was awarded First Class Honours, sharing the Dr Beth Blackall Memorial Prize for the highest grade in a graduate level thesis. He is associate teacher in Early Byzantine History at St Andrew’s Greek Orthodox Theological College.

Dr. Mio Bryce
mio.bryce@mq.edu.au

Mio Bryce is the head of Japanese Studies at Macquarie University. Her research interests include historical, sociological and psychological issues depicted in literature. She is currently involved in interdisciplinary research into youth cultures, with particular focus on manga and anime, in conjunction with English Department at Macquarie University.

Ms Katherine Cassis
katherine.cassis@sydney.edu.au

Ms Katherine Cassis teaches Modern Greek at the Department of Modern Greek Studies, The University of Sydney. She is currently in the process of completing her doctoral dissertation at the same university. She taught Modern Greek for seven years at Macquarie University, for three years at the Australian National University and has presented a series of lectures at the Open University of Sydney. Ms Cassis has contributed to conferences and regularly participates in the postgraduate seminars organized by the Department of Modern Greek at the University of Sydney. She has published various articles and is in the process of preparing a translation of the poetic and philosophical works of George Santarissi into English.

Dr Kyriaki Frantzi
kryiaki.frantzi@mq.edu.au

Dr Kyriaki Frantzi is a lecturer in Greek studies seconded by the Greek Ministry of Education in Australian universities since 2003. Her research areas are gender, performance, and Greek language and culture. She holds a Masters in the History and Economy of the Mediterranean and a PhD in the History of Women in Science.

Dr Athena Gavriel
athenas@paradise.net.nz

Athena Gavriel is a New Zealand born Greek and Cyriot. She has 35 years experience as a mental health psychiatric nurse, completed a BA in anthropology and PhD in Nursing. “We are all different and the same. Culture, identity and mental health: Worldviews, wellbeing and health—illness experiences of Helenists in Aotearoa New Zealand.” Her research and clinical practice interests include culture, identity and mental health.

Mr Leonard Janiszewski
leonard.janiszewski@mq.edu.au

Historian, Leonard Janiszewski, and documentary photographer, Billy Alexakis, have been researching the Greek-Australian historical and contemporary presence in Australia, and internationally, since 1982. Their project and archive, In Their Own Image: Greek-Australians, encompasses visual, oral and literary material. Various national and international touring exhibitions, books, articles and a film documentary have been produced. Of their exhibitions the most pronounced have been ‘In Their Own Image: Greek Australians’ and ‘Selling an American Dream: Australia’s Greek Café’, the latter is currently touring.

Dr Vicky Karaiskou
v.karaiskou@ouc.ac.cy

Vicky Karaiskou is Assistant Professor at the Open University of Cyprus, Program Studies in Hellenic Culture. Her research focuses on the relationships between works of visual art and their social environment, along with the ways through which iconographic, or other components contribute to the understanding of the historical and social phenomena. Her current projects extend in two directions: the first focuses on the reasons and processes through which art and culture in Greece during the last thirty years are often understood and consumed as social symbols. The second explores public sculptures in Cyprus.

Prof. George Kanariks
gkanarik@primusonline.com.au

George Kanariks OAM is Adjunct Professor at Charles Sturt University. He has published extensively on the literature, historiography, press and language of the Greeks in Australia and New Zealand. His books include Greeks Voices in Australia, The Greek Press in the Antipodes, and Intersubjunct language. He is the Director of the Greek Language. The Contribution of the Greek Language.

Dr Elizabeth Kefallinos
elizabeth.kefallinos@mq.edu.au

Elizabeth Kefallinos coordinates the Greek Studies Program at Macquarie University. She has published extensively on Modern Greek literature, Education and Greek-Australian women and writers. She currently is working on an oral history about the identity/identities of Greek-Australian women, since the mass migration of the 50's.

Mr Dimitri Kepreotes
sypress@greekerthodox.org.au

Dimitri is currently publishing director of St Andrew's Orthodox Press and since 2002 lecturer in Canon Law, Modern Greek and Christian Education at St Andrew's Greek Orthodox College, Sydney.

Prof Alanna Nobbs
alanna.nobbs@mq.edu.au

Alanna Nobbs has a background in Classical languages and is Head of the Department of Ancient History at Macquarie University and Deputy Director of the Ancient Cultures Research Centre.

Dr Paul Mckechnie
paul.mckechnie@mq.edu.au

Paul Mckechnie teaches Greek and Roman History at Macquarie University, having moved there from the University of Auckland in 2007. His research interests are in early Christianity, and Hellenistic Egypt. With Philippe Guillaume, he edited Ptolemy II Philadelphia and his World (Leiden, 2008). He and Dr. Elizabeth Kefallinos created Macquarie University's Open Universities Australia unit The Olympic Games, Ancient and Modern.

Dr Blanche Menadier
blanche.menadier@mq.edu.au

Blanche Menadier is currently the convenor of the Bachelor of International Studies at Macquarie University where she is responsible for the delivery of a number of subjects including Citizenship: Past, Present, Global, The European Union and the International Studies Internship. She has extensive experience in archaeological fieldwork, including nine seasons at the Bronze Age site of Troy, and is a frequent guest lecturer in the Department of Ancient History at Macquarie University.
Dr Ken Parry
ken.parry@mq.edu.au

Dr Parry is Senior Lecturer in the Department of Ancient History at Macquarie University specialising in the teaching and research of Byzantine History (including Art and Architecture), Patristics, Eastern Christianity and Silk Road Studies. He has edited The Blackwell Dictionary of Eastern Christianity (1999) and The Blackwell Companion to Eastern Christianity (2007) and has contributed to numerous other books and journals. He is currently engaged in researching early Christianity in Egypt, India and China.

Ms Sophia Sakellis
s.sakellis@unsw.edu.au

Ms Maria Shialis
maria.shialis@flinders.edu.au

In 2008, Maria completed a Bachelor in International Studies with a Diploma in Language at the University of Adelaide. A year later she completed a degree in Modern Greek with First Class Honours, and was awarded the Greek Orthodox Community of S.A. Inc. Constantinos AM Prize. She is currently a scholarship recipient undertaking a Ph.D. degree by research at Flinders University, investigating the settlement of the Greek-Cypriot migrants and refugees.

Dr Kenneth Sheedy
Ken.Sheedy@mq.edu.au

Dr Kenneth Sheedy was appointed the founding director of the Australian Centre for Ancient Numismatic Studies in the department of Ancient History at Macquarie University in 2000. He received his doctorate in Classical Archaeology from the University of Sydney in 1987. Between 1988 and 1991 he was a curator at the Powerhouse Museum in Sydney. He was appointed deputy director of the Australian Archaeological Institute at Athens in 1991. In 1997 he obtained the position of curator for the Sylloge Nummorum Graecorum Project at the British Museum, London. His fields of research and teaching are Greek numismatics, and the art and archaeology of Greece with emphasis on the archaic period. He has a special interest in the archaeology and history of the Cycladic islands. In addition to his on-going studies in the coinsage of the Cyclades, South Italy and Athens, he is interested in Geometric pottery, Protolithic pottery, archaic sculpture and the early history of Delos.

Ms Mersina Tynos-Soulou
mersina.tynos-soulou@mq.edu.au

Mersina presently working on her Ph.D. through CRSI (Centre for Research on Social Inclusion) of Macquarie University, titled ‘Whatever happened to Australia’s Multiculturalism, compare and contrast with the EU.’ Completed MA through Macquarie, B.A (Hons) UNSW.

Ms Andrea Stilianou
andrea@andreastilianou.com

Andrea, a Macquarie University scholarship recipient, is a freelance journalist who previously working in the Australian mass media as a daily newspaper reporter with News Corporation for about 10 years. Andrea also worked at the UN headquarters in New York, in the Department of Public Information. Andrea’s PhD project – in the fields of political science and international relations – focuses on her knowledge and interest in Cyprus, which is her country of birth and where she was made a refugee at a young age, along with her family.